I assume so. Trump said beforehand the elections were rigged but now that he won he has no reason to riot

The Democratic Party failed America. They were so confident that Trump was the anti-Christ that they could crown whoever they wanted and it would be a landslide victory. Watch clips of how election night 2016 started vs how it ended. They didn't take Trump seriously. At some point, fucking around, the democrats found out. In a Democracy, you let the people decide on who they are voting for, that did not happen in 2016, 2020, or 2024. The leaders of that party should take ownership and accountability that their strategy for the last 12 years has been a disaster and we need to start over. No Pelosi, Schumer, Biden, Clintons. Give the people what they actually want: healthcare, food, housing, education, infrastructure, wages.

spez0101 • 2mo ago •

Yeah she sucks but for those that voted for Kamala may have been too well informed. That she will have a good administration. That she will make rational choices. She should have been more pragmatic instead of center right leaning trying to appease to trumpers. She should have increased turn out by separating herself from Joe Biden.

17

Ophk3y • 2mo ago •

It's like a plague. In the last couple weeks more and more people started claiming their support for trump at my local hangout spots. Many I wasn't aware they were even trumpers. I try to put myself in their shoes to understand how or why they would want him as president, again! And I think I may be immune. It's a very confusing place over here.

Look on the bright side. At least abortion rights are passing in most states (except Florida. Sucks to be Florida).

I just think it's sad the majority of voters think they only have 2 choices. More independents are registered than ever before. Tired of voting against a candidate instead of for someone you actually support? Vote for a third party at all levels. Personally I think Chace Oliver would have been a good president. Fk this rigged two party system.

Just look at what these parties have done. Pitted Americans against each other. Empty promises from both sides. Record inflation. Destroying the progress the civil rights and suffrage movements made. Sky rocketing Costa of living because they both refuse to do away with archaic zoning rules. And if you're reading this thinking "ya, it's all the other sides fault," then you've been successfully played. The dem and rep parties are two sides of the same coin that often collude or are backed by the same billionaires.

Ask yourself, when's the last time a politician at any level from govoner up, won without a campaign donation total that exceeds several hundred thousand if not million dollars? The bigger wallet wins. Such a clown show.

> Record inflation.

There was a global pandemic dumdum

I've been Libertarian the last 3 elections and was really swinging for JoJo last time. Still voted for chase for same reason, I believe these individuals truly have America's best interests at heart.

pootatoss • 2mo ago •

Ranked choice voting would've solved the problem of wanting to vote for third parties, but it failed in 5 states.

Soft_Hardman • 2mo ago •

Americans can now understand how liberal Russians feel for the two decades. You will start to realise how dumb some people around you are and that you can't fix educational problem. Populists and fake spreaders will start to gain more and more power. This is only the beginning for you.

27

GeneralMatrim • 2mo ago •

Totally agree, new plan is I'm just going to start being way more selfish in my life.

Just going to look for ways to look out for myself, even at the detriment of others.

This is who we are apparently, either you get taken advantage or you take advantage.

Easy choice when you put it that way.

wishbeaunash • 2mo ago •

There will of course be endless takes about how this is all the Dems fault but honestly what else could they have done?

They gave America a choice between a reasonable sane candidate and a demented old lunatic who looks like an overdone piece of fried chicken running on a platform of 'I'll crash the economy lmao', and the voters decided they wanted the lunatic.

33

Soft_Hardman • 2mo ago •

In the first place, Trump would never get as much power in a country with a democracy that makes fucking sense as a system. If you guys had ten parties instead of two, and Trump would have to form coalitions, your country would look very different and a lot better. And secondly, Kamala is a fucking shit candidate lmao who tf ever gave a fuck about Kamala Harris? Of course the guy oozing charisma won against that robby_arctor • 2mo ago • Edited 2mo ago •

> honestly what else could they have done?

They ran an unpopular, mentally incompetent candidate who was bragging about an unaffordable economy and actively arming a genocide. When he proved too mentally incompetent to run a campaign, they "anointed" his VP to take over, with no primary or democratic input.

Democrats could have held a primary. They could have ran a candidate who could speak properly from the beginning. They could have adopted more popular policies for their campaign platform.

But they didn't, and now we all have to pay the price for their hubris.

The next 4 years are going to be Donald Trump's supporters excusing every bad thing that happens (worse economy, global wars, civil unrest) as somebody else's fault - never Donald's!

If we could somehow harness the power of their mental gymnastics, we could turn off the coal plants!

25

I'm so glad Kamala kept saying she'd reach across the aisle. Also rode on getting a Dick Cheney endorsement. You know who didn't reach across the aisle? The right. They want to put dems in re-education camps.

Absolute garbage campaign ran by the Deomcrats. They had to have planned this loss so they can turn around and change nothing in 2028.

PatrickMcC • 2mo ago •

The right didn't reach across the aisle? RFK, Tulsi, Elon, Rogan all former voting democrats. Hell even Trump was once a democrat... democrats got the war mongering Cheney's. Sorry they got fleeced in the trade.

Unapologetic_Witch • 2mo ago •

If my choice were based on this interaction, the enthusiasm of the republican individual would have been enough to make me decide. The other individual just “piggy backed” from her exchange with me to take advantage of the moment...

Experience is everything, and my personal experience during the Trump/Pence presidency has been FAR better economically than this Biden/Harris one. Let’s face it, at least the middle class was taken into consideration back then.

Edited: don’t we remember the “missing ballots” last time and all the distraction that caused? I rest my case.

If you look at the demographic results it’s clear the left has lost the younger generation of men. These leftist talking points constantly bashing what feels like all men, the cancelation of any left leaning male figures.. this is the chickens coming home to roost. Gen z men overwhelmingly supported trump this election cycle and I don’t see that changing any time soon. This is a damning election

When I tell people on the left I feel like I'm in the center on most issues they say I'm actually a republican fascist that's just too scared to admit it.

When I tell people on the right I feel like I'm in the center they say that's awesome.

The left tries to put on this act that it's welcoming to all people but it's actually not. They lost so many votes due to this. At this point it feels like the rights more accepting Reddit really had me thinking this wasnt going to be close but I forget this is one huge echo chamber and any other posts are deleted and users banned.

No wonder

Playing a small violin here, but I was banned for 30 days in r/Missouri for making one comment critical of Democrats. Idk if it's astroturfing or volunteer work, but thumbs are on the scales.

NanPlower • 2mo ago •

Reddit is the biggest liberal cesspool echochamber I've ever seen. if they used reddit as a poll there'd be like 12 votes for trump and 100000 for harris. Everyone was so convinced harris was gonna win in a landslide it was hilarious. Just goes to show how out of touch these people are with everyday normal americans.

Jamananas44 • 2mo ago •

Yeah, reddit (and most other social media) is all hive minded people. They ban conservatives from talking in most subs and you end up thinking 80% of the country is going to vote blue.

They were saying last night that Trump was getting a lot more of the young vote than they thought he would too so thats good.

This - I've shared over and over that the folks on Reddit tend to seek validation more than conversation. Any opposing thought, opinion or view gets downvoted so fast that only the echo chamber of groupthink remains.. and because constructive dialogue can't happen... we are... where we are...

South Park really messed up by casting Mr. Garrison as Trump. Boxed themselves in for 12 years.

IAmMuffin15 • 2mo ago •

Garrison as Trump really tells you where the creators of South Park are biased.

When Hillary ran for president, they just couldn't write her showing even the smallest modicum of common sense. They couldn't humanize her, they couldn't give her any likable traits, and they couldn't admit even one good thing about her.

But Trump? Not only did they portray him through a character that the audience empathizes with, they didn't even portray him as Trump at all. It's like they literally couldn't even stomach the idea of putting pen to paper and saying one bad thing about Trump specifically.

The fact there are still people who think South Park isn't a show for conservatives is sad to me

Cant say I'm surprised, historically, people vote for opposing parties if they feel like they are worse off economically. This is regardless of if the current leader is actually responsible for the worse economic conditions. Inflation hit the entire world because of covid, it didn't matter how well biden dealt with it, prices went up, people felt worse off, kamala had no shot of winning. We can argue about policies all day, you can point out how trump's tariffs will literally increase prices, but people don't care and dont understand these things well enough, they just want something different assuming things will improve.

Both parties ran right wingers; Democrats thought that leaning into their pro-establishment (eg her touring with the Cheneys), status quo (we love Biden), "anything but Trump" stance could outweigh Trump's pretend anti-establishment play acting. Americans are so anti-establishment that they showed themselves willing to buy into or be seduced by Trump's act (believing his crassness is an indicator of his being a radical, when he's very much a pillar of established financial and military power). If Democrats had run someone willing to genuinely call out the actual failures of American politics over the last quarter century they may have had a chance, but Dems will always lean right so that wasn't gonna happen.

ArmedWithBars • 2mo ago •

Bruh, the reddit astroturfing was insane to watch live. Biden drops out and right as Kamala throws her hat in we start seeing all this top posts on every major subreddit about how amazing Kamala was. This was within minutes of her press release.

Complete fucking retcon of her prosecutor career and doing nothing of note as VP. Suddenly shes this apex politician who is actually next to Biden for every single important decision, like she's steering the ship and fixing the country. In 2020 she got bodied on her first debate and couldn't even garner 1% of her own party, but magically she's the best we've ever had.

Dems can blame themselves for this and I think trying to run Biden for 2024 was the most critical mistake they made. Then choosing Kamala over a Dem primary due to losing all that Biden funding was the 2nd critical mistake.

Fun_Shock_1114 • 2mo ago •

Kamala wasn't an awful candidate. It's just that racism always wins in democracy. That's the nature of democracy. We see that all the time in other countries. Time to limit suffrage of dumb idiots.

There is always an option to “drop out.” This can be really bad for mental health. Let the country go where it goes. Hold your head high, make art, music, friendships and live the life you want to live. Ignore all of this noise

I just asked my elderly mother, who watches the news basically all day, if we can please consume less news now. If she wants to watch it all day long while I'm at work, fine, but I can't handle it being on non-stop. I can't handle hearing and seeing that orange shit pile pontificating for the next 4 years.

I'm Canadian (truly wouldn't have voted for trump if I was from the US) and don't really follow US politics besides anything I see posted in my home feed on reddit and from the last couple months until about 7 hours ago I would've actually bet my life savings on Kamala sweeping, all I would see are posts about how the trump campaign was in shambles and nobody was at his rallies and his VP pick was the worst pick in the history of VP picks and etc

I will say it certainly modified many of my opinions of how tightly controlled narratives can be in the media and how little that bothers nearly anyone who supports the side it benefits

Maybe not having genuine views of your own and just trying to please your voter base matters.

Unfortunately democrats will find a way to blame everyone but themselves. They shot themselves in the foot.

I'm tired of having the dems shove their candidates down our throat. First Hillary in 2016, then Biden and now Harris.

Hopefully 2028 they realize this and fix their mistakes.

I think where the Democratic Party failed this time around was such a focus on appearances. I voted democrat myself, but I did not like the way this campaign played out for us. It was all about making it seem like the country already knew that Kamala was the one to vote for and Trump was the one to vote against. The campaign was so focused on making it look like the majority of people already wanted to vote dem, I think in an effort to build a sense of credibility through that. I don't think that was a good idea

I agree. Reading what you said gave me flashbacks to 2016.

It felt like their #1 running point was that Trump is bad so you have to vote for us.

Dwbrown705 • 2mo ago •

Dems failed when they undermined Bernie Sanders for Hilary then decided Kamala is the nominee without any input from the citizens of this country. Not very democratic of them

Throwing the blame on a group, any group, for not voting for you enough is doom.

The media constantly being on the Democats' side has caused them to be unable to assess their own weaknesses. If someone calls them out, claim they're "a republican talking point" and fall into the Fox News Fallacy.

In fact, "that's a republican talking point" was the way Kamala responded to legit criticism in the 2020 primaries, and why the voters knew she wasn't ready to do anything.

Women have critical thinking skills and they can formulate their opinion from more than 1 topic. I'm pro abortion, but turning it into women's health or women's body autonomy is a bit of a stretch. Then calling women who voted for Trump "self hating" is insulting their intelligence and critical thinking skills.

I hadn't ever voted for Trump, but this kind of rhetoric is part of what pushed me to vote for him. The "if you don't share my opinion you're a racist/sexist" argument is lazy and insulting. Immigration was argued the same way.

I'm not trying to argue. I'm just trying to share my feelings so we can understand each other better. I hope we can all figure out how to get along better before the next election.

It’s not about race or sex for the people that voted against her. She didn’t have a plan that was going to make life in America better or fix any of our problems. The left told everyone that disagreed with them that they are racist or sexist.

[deleted] • 2mo ago •

There s a lot wrong with us in our culture and how we go about life. It's just kind of my thoughts since growing up in this country.

I think it a maturity or, rather, immaturity to actively engage with reality. I think it's actually really American to fight reality and facts. Cause I see much or any critical thinking going on here. It's a beat you to just show kind of attitude and I think it's one that's going to burn us hard.

But we chose. We had one who's got a full record and resume of government jobs. Has worked law and speaks in a clear and communicated manner. But we went with the guy who deep throats a microphone...

I really we had more balls, make demands. Cause I'm going to start not believing many things to come.

Trump is basically a middle finger to the establishment that has consistently lied to and failed the American people. Is Trump a narcissistic, lying, pedophile? Yes, and people will vote him in anyways to show you just how deep their content runs for anything that resembles the same order that they feel has let them down.

I voted for Kamala in an overwhelmingly Red state. But this is the general thought process I see and am surrounded by. It is a gross overcorrection, but I believe it is important to understand the mindset that drives so many people to vote for such a vile man. Contempt runs deep in our country. Especially with a {majority} that feels they aren't being taken seriously. Just my guess though.

Not enough. People were apathetic, many didn't like Kamala so they just didn't vote. It feels like we had more to fight for in 2020. I just assume it will all flip again in 4 years... if there is an election. The conservatives control every branch of government now, which is not great for any country to be so one sided.

What views? All I was hoping for in any candidate is someone who'd protect the environment (clean air, water, safe forests and healthy food) and make sure we protect our interests at home and abroad.

Anyone who can do that gets my vote.

You'd think that would be a universal view.

NiceCornflakes • 2mo ago •

This is the worst thing about his success. But the environment is still fucked, it didn't matter if Kamala or Donald won, unless someone sucks out all the excess CO2 in the next few years, climate change is gonna fuck us all.

Reality

CaptainImaginary5982 • 2mo ago •

Joe Biden dropping out of the presidential race so late is what tanked the election for the democrats. I'll never personally like Trump nor am I republican but the democrats hand-selecting Kamala Harris without appearing in any primary or really showing any interest in running sets a terrible precedent.

13

GringoRedcorn • 2mo ago •

I am really struggling to reconcile the truth that Harris's selection was problematic with the reality that Trumps nomination really wasn't that different. They did the primary procedure but it was a dog and pony show. There was no question who the GOP nominee would be the moment Biden took office. So why do the procedures matter so much when they are bypassed, yet matter little enough that they can be almost entirely ceremonial in other cases?

accountcasual • 2mo ago •

Literally this wasn't about race at all. You can be upset about the results if you want but don't go floundering making up stuff like this because it makes you feel better. There's many reasons that Harris lost and none of them are her race. If you want the other side to win next time look at the actual reasons instead of just making some up. Otherwise you can never get better.

I don't give a fuck what race she is. Donald was president before and didn't become dictator.

I have a vague sense of optimism for anyone dissapointed with the current outcome. (From someone in the UK)

He's old, unhealthy. He wears adult diapers. He eats McDonald's everyday.

And the man is a felon, using presidency as a shield.

This might not be a grab at tyranny, he may just be looking for a way to avoid legal repercussions.

It's just a perk that it's a way that strokes his ego.

If his body craps out on him in two years time, he will be gone, facing no consequences for his crimes, and his vile and stupid words will go with him. He will likely be no tyrant, just a man quite literally crapping his pants and waiting out the end.

But, it is a reflection of America. What America chooses, what it prioritises, and what it ignores. Trump or no Trump, voting America has made a choice that the rest of the world looks on at in confusion and dissapointment.

OperationAsshat • 2mo ago •

There are many people that look at it with the same attitude here, especially judging by how many people voted for harris despite her not being anywhere near a good candidate. 15

Sad-South8594 • 2mo ago •

They only wanted to keep the Obama succession alive. That was their agenda.

HairyAugust • 2mo ago •

This seems like one of the biggest takeaways. Joe Biden never should have ran for re-election and should have instead allowed for a real democratic primary. Perhaps more importantly, the people in Biden's inner circle should have been raising red flags about his deteriorated condition two years ago. It has been blatantly obvious for a long time that Biden was suffering from a mental decline, and nobody in the Democratic leadership stepped forward to do the right thing until it was way too late.

the majority of Americans are fed up with progressive policies and feel that things originally intended to help people have gone far beyond that to making people feel entitled.

Republicans don't just control POTUS. The entire federal government is red now. Republicans control POTUS, and Senate and are on track to take the house. None of this is by a small amount either. This is by relatively huge margins.

The only liberal candidate who maybe had a chance was RFK. But you guys screwed that up.

I live right next door (Canada), you have no idea I'm scared of what's to come because of my family, also I have family down in the US(you guessed right, immigrants) who I'm frightened for. If it was just America and Americans it would be a dream.

recycle_me_no_jutsu • 2mo ago •

71m voted for Trump. 66m voted for Kamala. So just fuck those 66m people right?

BenderTheIV • 2mo ago •

Things need to become really bad before they get better. Maybe it's better this way, in the end, left and right are mostly puppets. I'll live to see man-made Horrors beyond my comprehension.

I'm a single mom. My POS ex-husband doesn't pay a penny of support and sits in prison for drug related crimes. I rely on public services like healthcare for myself and kids. We have been on our own for 4 years. I'm afraid of what this means for us and for the rest of the vulnerable population. It feels wrong. I'm in such disbelief. Knowing Trump doesn't give a shit about me or my kids and especially so because I didn't vote for him I can't help but feel like this will be the hardest years to come for my family. If he can lower grocery prices, great, but that won't mean anything when I'm paying thousands of dollars for doctor visits.

That's exactly what I kept thinking after so many posts making it out that Kamala was going to win. Very unaware of the rest of the country.

ComradeBirdbrain • 2mo ago •

Well obviously. Reddit leans left and is an echo chamber compared to real life which leans right and is more nuanced.

voters were probably moderate and Reddit doesn't take too kindly to having anything but a formally left view

For a moment I was hopeful As last presidency he didn't get much done.

Does he have a majority in house and senate this time? I feel sick.

15

Sco0bySnax • 2mo ago •

He has the house, senate, judiciary and the popular vote.

The dems have quite literally been steamrolled. Everything that happens federally from his first day in office onwards is going to be Republican policy. The good and the bad.

Remember to remind people of that.

He had the majority in the house and senate last time as well, at least when he first took office.

18

Ok_List_9649 • 2mo ago •

Interesting. I woke up, looked at the results and said " God are humans stupid". I think gullible or willing to put their money ahead of all else could also replace stupid.

We have loosed the Kraken on the world, watch the destruction.

Trump

-3

Chesstincase • 2mo ago •

25 million few votes than last election... I just want to take that it. 22 million of those were democratic votes. If even half those people voted again this would have been completely different. We didn't even win the popular vote this time. Politics feels like it has become a war of attrition. How many voters can you keep from becoming disenfranchised with your message and it's clear that Trump has done a far better job of curating a cult that will vote for him regardless of what he does, how he does it or who it hurts.

19

PapaZiro • 2mo ago •

tallguyRN • 2mo ago •

I believe a lot of voters abstained out of protest for the current US stance on Israel and Palestine, which to me is the worst thing you can choose to do. Sometimes on a test there is the “most right” answer, when all of them are right or wrong.

I sound cringe saying this but could he have rigged it? I feel the rhetoric of Americans before the election was mitt Kamala than Trump even republicans going to support Kamala . And yet republicans took the house and senate.

Make it make sense.

Vikodin5150 • 2mo ago •

Reddit is obviously not representative of real life.

jj4211 • 2mo ago •

It was shameful to support Trump and thus people would be reluctant to talk openly but were happy to vote privately.

He won for the same reason he lost in 2020, when people are unhappy with facets of the economy, they always vote for the "other team". They have no way of evaluating the specifics of a candidate's plan but they know the performance of the last winning team.

Americans collectively are far stupider than we all are willing to acknowledge.

Something was a blind spot in messaging. I suspect it was right-wing pod casts which, where all full of disinformation, which nobody was countering or paying much attention to outside the bubble. Unchecked lies fed to the gullible.

Now, allowing the gullible to suffer the consequences of what they voted for won't even be all that an effective a counter in the future either. They'll keep consuming the lies and while their getting pissed on, they'll believe it's golden rain with electrolytes.
